Striving for success

The California Community Colleges Board of Governors (CCCBG) has released the results of a six year study conducted on the state’s 112 community colleges students and their students.

Beginning in 2006, and through the spring of 2012, the CCCBG tracked the progress of all Victor Valley College students who enrolled at VVC in that time frame. Statistics show that only 38.6 percent of those students went on to complete either a degree or transfer outcome.

Students who entered VVC after meeting UC transferable pre-requisite scores on their assessment had a 73.1 percent of obtaining a degree or transfer status. Those who scored for placement in remedial courses went on to complete their degree or transfer status 35.6 percent of the time.

“I’ve been teaching here 12 years, and every year, my students come to freshman composition less prepared,” said English Professor Bruce Wolcott. The statistics show that many students are not prepared for the basic requirements that are needed for making the transition into college. For the students who score below requisite level, remedial courses must be taken before the student can advance to college level courses. Remedial courses do not provide acceptable UC transferrable or degree level credits.

“According to the master plan of the Community Colleges Board of Governors, community colleges were designed to be open to everybody,” said Tim Johnston, Doctor of education.

Easy enrollment accessibility weighs heavy on the resources of the college and due to insufficient funds, the college is unable to provide preparation tools for every person who plans to enroll at VVC.

The college is initiating programs within a network of 23 participating high-schools to help prepare students for making the transition into the next level of education.

The Victor Valley Student Success Committee, in partnership with the K12 Bridge program are taking steps toward improving assessment scores at the high-school level. They are initiating ‘interventions’ which

Summer sessions: Added classes pave the way for students

By Kristen Martin

Approximately 200 classes have been added to the summer schedule to better accommodate the student needs at Victor Valley College. The new schedule will not be posted on WebAdvisor until May 1.

“With feedback from students about the need for class, the enrollment management committee asked the Department Chairs and Deans to add to the summer schedule,” said Peter Allan, Interim Executive Vice President.

With more available classes, graduating VVC students benefit from the increased courses. The incoming high school students who are looking to get ahead in college courses are also able to take advantage of the newly added classes.

“The addition of these classes will allow High School students to enroll in College level classes which will count towards their High School graduation, and give them an opportunity to enroll in classes in the Fall semester,” said Allan.

With the availability of classes, many students can thrive from the added courses. A large portion of students wanting to enroll in summer session were discouraged due to the lack of variety.

Phi Theta Kappa gets inspired

By Janice Shore, Rampage Reporter

In early April, members of the Victor Valley Community College Phi Theta Kappa (PTK) honors society attended their annual convention held in the San Jose Convention Center along with 4,000 other members of PTK.

“We are all in different age groups, we all have different backgrounds, but we are all by the same common purpose and because of that we all have had a chance to develop a certain kind of relationship with each other,” said Natalie Bonello, Phi Theta Kappa Honor Topic Coordinator.

“What was so inspiring and memorable about that speech is that it told everybody success is in their own hands, you don’t have to be born with it,” said Bonello.

Bonello, who has been involved in the honors society for three and half semesters, lit up when she spoke of the powerful advice Colvin offered to his audience. Much of what Colvin’s book was about was very similar to the foundation Phi Theta Kappa prides themselves in. Bonello is working to implement what she learned from Colvin’s lecture not just in the group she is a part of but also in her academic career.

“If you push yourself each and every time the possibilities are limitless. It may be challenging but it is in your own hands,” said Bonello, as she reflected on what she took away from watching Colvin’s speech.

The group attended educational forums which took place in a classroom setting where they got an in-depth look at the many things Phi Theta Kappa does. They were given information about their Honors in Action (HA) project and the best way to utilize what they find to pursue their HA goals. The project is used to instill intellectual prosperity and to create leadership and action to aid their community according to their website www.ptk.org.

This project touches on the four cornerstones that Phi Theta Kappa was founded on; leadership development among members, fellowship to new members, scholarship for research, and service to the community. Each chapter is given an overall topic and must develop a research question to apply in order to develop a plan that help make an impact on their community.

Job seekers lined the walls of the Gym on Victor Valley Colleges’ lower campus during the Community Job Fair on April 23. Twenty-six companies attended the event offering information, accepting applications and reviewing resumes from VVC students and non-students alike.

Participants had mixed feelings about the event.

“I hoped there would be more actual jobs here,” said Robert Adame, who hopes to enroll at VVC in the near future. “I like the educational programs, but I’m here looking for a job!”

However, Justin Nguyen, a VVC student in training to become a registered nurse is pleased with his results. He attended the fair looking to find a job in a medical setting, and received a call back within hours of submitting an application with an ‘at-risk’ youth program.

“I’ve worked with kids at church and I have some experience,” Nguyen said. “I gave them my resume and they said I’d be a good candidate. It’s good pay, so I’m pretty excited.”

The fair boasted a wide variety of organizations and an even wider array of positions from sales jobs to engineering careers. While some work descriptions included more advanced education, others provided on-the-job training once hired.

Cemex, a building materials company, had representatives attend the fair to provide information on how to apply. The company is currently looking for general laborers, dispatch, engineers, maintenance workers and welders.

“The salary positions will be online. The hourly positions, we’re sending them down to get an application and attach their resumes,” said Cemex Mine supervisor, Jessie Gomez. “We did talk to a few guys that said they had welding and maintenance experience.”

Gomez gave out over 200 business cards during the four-hour fair.

VVC students found ample opportunities to get paid for putting their education to good use. The Apple Valley High School Sundevil PRIDE After School Program took time to speak with students interested in tutoring. Alpha Connection and Think Together were also among the groups looking for applicants excited about working with youth.

Human Resources Director and Administrator, Evonnda Hull, came prepared to hire for both full and part-time positions with Alpha Connection Youth and Family Services. Past job fairs have proven valuable to the agency.

“More than half our staff right now we hired through job fairs,” Hull said.

Alpha Connection staffs between 50-70 people and currently has 22 kids in their foster care and probation program. They are also looking for volunteers for their new tutoring program.

Members of the High Desert Community who missed this community job fair are invited to attend the High Desert Regional Job Fair on Wed. May 15, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the San Bernardino County Fairgrounds Building 1. The fairground is located at 14800 Seventh St. in Victorville. What the duck?

By Micah Raimo
Special to the RamPage

Many waterfowl use the lake as a migration rest stop, but the Canada Geese use the water as a yearly roost. Seeing a nesting Goose on the grounds is uncommon, seeing them in great numbers is normal and students are accustomed (and somewhat annoyed) at the visiting gaggles. Like most of their fowl cousins, they are not people friendly.

According to the Victor Valley College Publication, “Fifty Years,” the college was built around a lake reserved for duck hunting.

Early hunting decimated the population. Hunters gave no thought to the dwindling numbers. Many species were believed to be extinct until the 1960s; around the time the campus opened to the High Desert community.

Now the bird is placed on The International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN) list as “Least Concern.”

Towards the end of Spring Semester, the parents begin to fly in and coast along the surface of the lake. Silently, they invade with numbers large enough to be noticed. Typically, the Canada Geese stands about knee high with a silver belly, brown wings, a black head and a white chin strap.

By the time Fall Semester starts, the grey goslings are scampering about the grass until they are as tall as their parents. The numbers of Geese have often risen to be a nuisance. In the Spring of 2012, the ducks were raising their young in force. Students were complaining about the mass of feathers and nipping mothers. But, one morning they were gone. Whether or not they were killed or trapped is still a mystery.

One mama Canada Goose was spotted tending to her embryonic brood on campus. The Male stands tall pacing back and forth while the mom sits on the eggs while students pass by the nurturing bird. In the meantime, students traverse around the hissing mothers and walk over their green poo for the following onslaught of the Canada Goose.

The Phi Theta Kappa organization offers awards to individuals who excel in an academic setting. During the convention, the VVC chapter was honored with a 3-star rating certificate for their commitment to achieving the goals they have set for themselves. To earn a certain number of stars, each chapter has to complete a list of activities and goals that relate to the four structures of Phi Theta Kappa; leadership, fellowship, scholarship, and service. They are currently working towards receiving a 5-star rating at the next convention.

One of the many benefits that come with being part of PTK is the recognition members receive in the community for being part of an prestigious organization. And while each member within the organization very in personality it is their attitude towards education that unites them.

“Phi Theta Kappa brought us together, we are an unlikely group. Outside of Phi Theta Kappa we probably wouldn’t have the same relationships,” said Bonello.

At the convention the VVC chapter participated in signing a pledge to commit themselves to completing their education. Currently they are working to set forth a plan that will help to encourage other students at VVC to achieve a higher education and to be proactive about reaching goals students set for themselves.
VVC prepares for celebration of Mexican heritage

By Brenda Ortiz
RamPage Reporter

An excellent cultural experience can be found at Victor Valley College on May 4, where families can join together to celebrate the richness of the Mexican culture. Through food, music and dance, everyone has the opportunity to experience Mexico right in their backyard.

Though many have the misconception that Cinco de Mayo is Mexico’s Independence Day, it is in fact a day to commemorate for a different reason: Mexico’s army defeated France during the six-year Franco-Mexican War in 1862. Even though this monumental moment occurred in Mexico, it is commonly celebrated in the U.S. by the Mexican-American population.

The 40th Annual Cinco de Mayo Family Festival will be hosted by the City of Victorville, Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, VVC and Wal-Mart. Other vendors and sponsors are expected to attend and raise funds. The proceeds will be given to VVC in the form of scholarships.

Not only is the event to acknowledge a heritage, but also an opportunity for diversity to bring families together. “It brings a lot of people together and enjoy the festivities,” said Lynn Guardado, a physical education and dance instructor at VVC. Guardado’s dance class is set to perform at this year’s event.

Last year’s turnout was estimated at 13,000 people, who came far and wide to join in and celebrate Cinco de Mayo. This year’s line-up for festivities includes food vendors, traditional Mexican dancers, Aztec dancers and mariachi. There will also be a Kid Zone where children can go to meet with characters such as Dora the Explorer, Diego, and McGruff the Crime Dog. Home Depot will be there as well with special activities for the children.

“We are going to be honoring Felix Diaz, who is a former member of Victorville’s City Councilmen. He will be the grand Marshall of the event and we are going to give him special recognition for all his years of service to the community,” said Eric J. Camarena, Hispanic Chamber of Commerce Chairman.

The festival will be held on May 4 around the lake at VVC beginning at 10 a.m. and lasting until 6 p.m. It is a great opportunity to enjoy some time with the family and have a taste of Mexican culture as they celebrate a victory for their heritage.

Ram it Forward: giving more than just trucks

By Alexandra Roland

Victorville Motors does a lot more than selling cars and trucks to the community. They have recently picked up an interest in assisting Victor Valley College.

They’ve held fundraisers for multiple causes throughout the years from Wrightwood all the way to Lucerne Valley to Barstow, and everything in between, according to Victorville Motor’s Director of Sales, Billy Mack.

On April 16 and April 24, Victorville Motors held fundraisers at VVC called Ram it Forward. The company brought some of their finest trucks and took students out on a quick test drive, followed by some free food and barbeque. The fundraiser donated up to 25 dollars per test drive towards VVC, which is distributed from VVC’s Foundation evenly between VVC groups.

“I feel that every school needs help like they’re giving the school, and I would like to see them help the music department because the classes keep getting dropped,” said student Justin Morelino.

Victorville Motors’ goal was to reach at least 300 test drives. Students had positive reviews about the fundraiser and enjoyed the work the dealership is doing to help out VVC. They also voiced their opinions on what departments they would like to see get assistance in the future.

“I think it’s cool that they’re giving out free food. It’s nice that they’re taking the time out of their day to help our school raise money, too. I would like to see them help the Child Development department,” said student Taylor Brown.

It takes a lot of effort and planning to ensure that the Ram it Forward event runs smoothly.

A sugar-free rush to the finish line

On Sunday April 21, D.J. Fraydealfaro played the well-known triumphant song “Eye of the Tiger” as first place runner Sebastian Angelo trotted to the chalk drawn finish line at Victor Valley College’s first annual Diabetes Awareness Run.

The 5k run wrapped around VVC’s lower and upper campus was arranged by Kevin Barda, a cross country coach and Interim Student Service Specialist at the Transfer Center. There were dozens of participants from all age groups. This race reminds people of how diabetes is a common disease.

Mike Ambuski, a 35 year old participating runner and a member of Weight Watchers, is an example of someone who was heavily overweight and affected with diabetes. With the help of the company, Ambuski was able to create a new lifestyle for him.

“My doctor was like ‘You really need to take this seriously.’ He put me through diabetes education. Just knowing the effects of diabetes. You could lose limbs; you could lose your eyesight. I have an uncle on my dad’s side, an uncle or his father, who lost a leg,” said Ambuski.

Both Ambuski and his wife, Velvet, struggled with their weights but with the help of Weight Watchers, they lost a combined 257 pounds. Ambuski did not care about winning, wanting only to show his support and be active, but when awards were given out he won second place for his overall age group. Ambuski is not the only person dealing with the effects of diabetes running in his family, the DJ also has similar problems.

D.J. Fraydealfaro has children and worries about their health but he is pleased with the changes schools have made by offering healthier choices.

“My Grandma actually passed away from diabetes. It runs in my dad’s side of the family. My dad was cast as a Type II and I was diagnosed as a pre-diabetic,” said Fraydealfaro.

According to VVC Child Development Director Kelley Johnson, this is the year of health and wellness awareness for the college with a special emphasis on pre-diabetes. Johnson, with the help of other individuals at VVC, wants to bring awareness to pre-diabetes and Type II diabetes by highlighting it.

This helped initiate a 5k run. All the proceeds went to the American Diabetes Association. While people had to pay to participate in the race, there were booths staffed by people volunteering their time and services to help the community learn about health and wellness practices.

Lori Cooper, a retired cop and creator of the company Lori D. Cooper Training Inc., is also a part of the fight for health and wellness. She volunteered at VVC and held a booth promoting her fitness boot camp at the race.

In addition to Cooper’s booth, there were also representatives from Vanity Salon and Spa booth offering free massages before and after the race for its runners.

“It’s like anything,” said race participant Mark Campbell. “When you race it’s a discipline and when you have a health condition like diabetes you gotta be smart. Pace yourself and do the right thing: diet and exercise.”

The race ended with a raffle of donated prizes, medals being given to the winners from each age group and a moment of silence for the runners in Boston who were injured or killed before they could cross their finish line.

First place runner, number 630 Sebastian Angelo (in yellow) starts the race off strong.

“Get active with the community. Find a cause, get behind it, and do the right thing: diet and exercise.” said Mack. He encourages people to find a cause, get behind it, and get active with the community.

“The community needs us, and we need them,” said Mack.
Ready Rams spice things up

By Briana Buchanan
RamPage Reporter

What a scorcher! Tongues sizzled, faces poured sweat last Wednesday as students braved the fiery frontiers of homemade hot wings in a contest hosted by the ReadyRams Club in the S.A.C.

“My mouth was on fire,” said Sui Motufau, shortly after experiencing one of the hottest challenges offered at VVC.

During Club Rush, college organizations littered the Student Activities Center, vying for student’s attention by hosting exciting events. At center stage, literally, stood the ReadyRams club with its three dollar buy-in hot wing contest. A signed waiver was required before even attempting the event, a warning, perhaps an invitation, for thrill-seekers. Eleven eager contestants prepared for the showdown.

The wings and sauce were prepared by ReadyRam students themselves, a unique sauce packed with heat. Main ingredients included wings, BBQ sauce and an extract simply known as, ‘Satan’s Blood’. The extract was compromised of almost pure capsacin and rated at 800,000 Scoville units. Satan’s Blood was simply swirled in with BBQ sauce until deemed hot (read: painful) enough.

Rules? Simple. Contestants could not touch their water during the contest and first one to completely finish seven wings claimed first place. First place prize consisted of a $25 Applebee’s Gift Card and a ReadyRams t-shirt, second place prize was a $10 food café card, third place – a simple pat on the back.

After a tense couple minutes filled with shouts of encouragement from the gathering crowd, James Agor swiftly raised his both his hands in the air as a sign of completion. Not a mere second later, Sui Motufau also threw her hands in the air, and Jesse Mwangi finished close behind. All contestants proved, however, their mighty eating prowess before scattering to find milk, chocolate, or other fire-killing alternatives. This would be Agor’s second time securing his title as champion of the contest.

“My strategy was shove the entire chicken in my mouth, literally suck it off the bone. Do not chew, swallow meat whole,” said Agor.

Motufau appeared cool and collected after her close finish. “Chocolate burns fire, I ate chocolate right after and it just killed it,” Motufau said.

LA Times festival of books: A first person account

By Daniel Mariano
Online/Social Media Editor

More than 200,000 people, 1,000 exhibitors, and local High Desert author/Victor Valley College alumni, Tania L. Ramos took on one of the West Coasts’ largest literary events of the year: The Los Angeles Times Festival of Books. Preparations for the festival began December 2012 for Ramos.

“I’ve been thinking about actually being here since I first attended a few years back and thought to myself, ‘I hope one day I can be amongst all these awesome authors and have the chance to let the world see my book.’ Now, here I am, an author with her book on display at the LA Times Festival of Books,” said Ramos.

The morning of the event, before the early sun even had the chance to show its face, Ramos and a few staff members rolled out on their two-hour drive down to the event at University of Southern California.

During the ride, Ramos hinted that she was nervous, although she gave the impression of being completely nonchalant about the whole thing. Thoughts were being collected and some of the PR staff were reciting to themselves and practicing what they would say about the authors and books they were representing.

One woman purchased a copy of Ramos’ book, Be Still, and then went on to mention that she’s a teacher at Lincoln High School in East Los Angeles and plans to introduce Ramos’ book into the school’s library. After the book was signed, the woman and Ramos exchanged info and informally set up a speaking event for Ramos.

As the evening came, the flow of attendees did not die down. It remained consistently busy until 30 minutes after the event was officially over. Ramos and the PR staff packed up their valuables and secured their spot. They made their way over to their vehicle and set home back into the Inland Empire/High Desert.

As day two of the event approached, Ramos and some PR staff were up past midnight preparing for the next day. The majority only got about four hours of sleep, waking before the sun once more.

The rate and flow of traffic doubled and remained that way all day. Through all the madness, books were sold, laughs were shared and many stories were told. At the end of the festival, Ramos had sold over 20 copies of her book.

“Attendees only come to these things for free stuff. The fact that you sold more than one book is beyond remarkable,” said Stephanie Beyer, LAFOB Zone Manager.

Beyer’s words held to the matter, since every author, publishing house and vendor was for the most part, giving away books by the hundreds. Some readers were so intrigued by the angles of books on display at the PR’s booth that they returned with the money to buy a copy.

In the end, Ramos and the PR firm gave out almost 10,000 items of promotional bookmarks and flyers to attendees. Almost 30 softcover books were sold, not including a few that were given away. Over a few hundred friendships, fans and potential clients for the PR Firm and Ramos were made.

“This was more than I imagined it would’ve been. The turnout was beyond great. I just can’t believe so many people wanted to meet and take a picture with me,” said Ramos.

“The person that said, ‘dreams are just dreams and it’s best to just keep your feet on the ground’ was wrong. Anything is possible, you just need to realize it yourself,” Ramos said.

Tania L. Ramos is the Author of Be Still and Surviving the Writing Apocalypse. She is Victor Valley College alumni and is currently in the process of booking all her upcoming tour/lecture dates with her PR firm for the upcoming months of June, July and August.

members of the public.

“The plants are native and obscure... You can’t just buy them at Home Depot,” said Agriculture faculty member Carlos Ruiz.

The plants for sale included native and desert landscape plants, tomato plants, eucalyptus and mulberry trees, sweet and hot peppers, cucumbers, melons, herbs, and more. Certain varieties of the landscape plants are unique to the program. The tomato plants were grown organically and were of Heirloom and open-pollinated varieties.

“The money will help us buy soil, seeds, pots, and other materials. It also funds our field trips to botanical gardens, greenhouses, and different plant communities,” said student worker Elaine Rutledge.

The sale is run by the Agriculture department and all of the profits will go towards enhancing their students. This allows them to buy their own supplies so they do not have to depending solely on money from the college.

Agriculture and Natural Resources department at VVC focuses on giving students an education and awareness of how to use natural resources and take hold of what the earth has to offer. The department gives class on basic agriculture, animal sciences, plant sciences, natural resources management classes, water management, and more.

The funds from this sale will help grow a department providing better resources to its students as well as being beneficial to the community.

Victor Valley College students, local artists and community members volunteered to restore a mural on the side of Victor Bowl to its original state after it had become defaced with graffiti.

“I remember this mural when I was a kid. It kind of bothers me that someone would just graffiti over art,” said VVC art student Ronnie Senteno.

All five panels of the mural were damaged with red paint covering the panoramic desert vista. Once the mural restoration is finished the wall will be sealed with a layer that will protect against any future vandalism.

Fine Arts Instructor Anna-Marie Veloz expressed the community’s support over the restoration and the desire to preserve art.

“This is the first time we’ve restored a mural. The community’s been really interested and open to it,” said Veloz. ☐

A rose by any other name may smell as sweet, but to Gwendolen and Cecily a man by any other name than Ernest is not much man at all. That is "The Importance of Being Earnest," Victor Valley College's last production of spring 2013.

"Gwendolen and Cecily have made their minds up, they will not marry anyone who isn't named Ernest," said director Dr. John Rude.

Gwendolen Fairfax, daughter of Lady Bracknell and cousin to Algernon Moncrieff, is the love of John Worthing. Worthing assumes the name Ernest while in town and it is an identity that Gwendolen falls in love with. The fictional Ernest also draws the interest of Worthing's ward, Cecily Cardew. Moncrieff, on the other hand, is a model of Victorian excess. The pretentious Lady Bracknell is a woman "of opinion that a man who desires to get married should know either everything or nothing" and Worthing is a man who claims to know the latter. He seeks to win her approval and with it Gwendolen's hand in marriage. He might do so, if not for his lost parents.

Every character is a caricature of themselves from the start. The emptiness of their persons is further illustrated by their wealth and leisure. Even so the motivation of both Worthing and Moncrieff is women, and not money.

"They aren't real people," said Dr. Rude.

The British farce is one Dr. Rude is fond of and has wanted to do for over 40 years. He is alarmed by the notion that anyone might come to the play and search for meaning; according to him, Oscar Wilde would roll over in his grave. Instead it is "a trivial comedy for serious people" as Wilde labeled it.

"It's classic in a sense, it's the only one Oscar Wilde wrote like this," said Dr. Rude.

The performers are hard at work rehearsing in the evenings. According to the director the lines are memorized, but the caricature of themselves from the start.

French alternative band Phoenix finally released their second album, titled "Bankrupt!" following the success of their last record "Wolfgang Amadeus Phoenix." After the completion of a world tour, the four abstract minded musicians came together in the studio of Adam Yauch (Beastie Boys) to begin cutting their newest track. The only word suitable for the final product: psychedelic.

In the April issue of "Rolling Stone," lead singer Thomas Mars expressed the band's interest to move away from the style of their last album and explore unique instruments and retro production tools. The album features a small toy keyboard they found in a Versailles pawn shop. The final mixing was done on a vintage console also used in the production of Michael Jackson's classic hit, "Thriller."

At times, the line between keys and guitar was so blurred one couldn't tell the difference. The band even mixed up their use of the drum machine and an actual drum kit. While switching up their sound, the lyrics remain similar. Creating a unique hybrid between melancholy and upbeat, they've meshed sad words and happy sounds. It's a mix that is so crazy, it almost works.

The complexity of their songs must be commended. The songs are Stepping onto the San Bernardino County Fairgrounds was quite pleasing to the senses. Throughout the grounds, a medley of spices wafted across the event, as competing barbeque vendors displayed their expertise with meats on charcoaled grills. At the same moment of walking in, on stage 14-year-old Chase Walker is playing a fresh take on blues music — and he’s doing pretty well. Seemingly, the entire event flows together easily, however, lead coordinator Debbie Yopp-Turner knows the road to the 2nd Annual High Desert Music Festival (HDMF) has been a long, and difficult venture.

“This was really difficult. Because we were so new, there were a few things we thought we could do better from the first year,” said Turner.

Turner’s idea for the HDMF had very unique beginnings.

“When I got out of prison,” Turner said, “I wanted to help and be around creative people, because art is a healing activity.”

From this point forward, it was a question of how to bring the people together in the most cohesive way. She pointed towards American culture, which is known for taking what we got, making it shine, and sharing it. This is the reason for juxtaposing blues and, for the first time at the HDMF, a BBQ event. According to Turner, both of these arts were founded on taking the scraps, looking at what you got and make it into something more.

“BBQ is in America. Its roots are founded here, and it is the pieces of meat that nobody wanted and we made it a delicacy,” said Turner.

Some of the local vendors at the HDMF are now nationally ranked organizations that have a chance at moving forward to be entered into The Jack Daniel’s Invitational which has a purse of 50,000 dollars. At the very least, BBQ is in America. Its roots are founded here, and it is the pieces of meat that nobody wanted and we made it a delicacy. BBQ is in America. would bring congas and perform for inmates. It was when she saw the prison inmates sing, dance and play all together she knew she wanted to pursue this in the community.

“Yes, it was at that time…” she sighed and nodded, “I just knew. I wanted to help and be around creative people, because art is a healing activity.”

this definitely made the entire event even more ambitious. Especially since the BBQ wasn’t even the main focus of the festival. While the vendors were cooking, the bands were performing.

“Blues is America’s contribution to music,” said Ronnie Stewart, Director of Bay Area Blues Society.

As he is telling me this, blues band Wumbloozo is going into a complex blues jam with a jazz saxophone playing a fiercely cool solo. I don’t doubt his claims.

The Bay Area Blues Society was one of several blues organizations present at the festival dedicated to spread blues, jazz and soul as a form art.

“Blues is the root of most of American music: jazz, rock ‘n roll, and soul. So we thought we would use that as a springboard to identify that we have a lot in common,” said Turner.

The sweltering heat proved to be of little concern to these musicians dedicated to the blues.

Backstage, the Caravan of All Stars prepped for their upcoming set as Big Papa & the TCB gave a stunning blues performance with a cool blend of styles and rhythm.

Closing the festival out Saturday night with impressive musicianship and skill was Rod Piazza & the Mighty Flyers. A blues harmonica player, Piazza’s energy crackled throughout the audience with his rhythmic boogie sound in the spirit of West Coast blues.

As the festival came to a close, Turner says she hasn’t slept for nearly three days. Still, she is in control of the event as people still ask her about the day’s event; she remains calm and relaxed. People walk up to her and tell her the festival went great, as they shake her hand. As we sit, her mind on a multitude of tasks, I ask how she’ll look back at the High Desert Music Festival. She pauses and while reminiscing of the event Turner smiled and said, “It’s a gift.”
Truly, a night to Remember

By Todd Hadler

The concert had been sold out for almost two months in advance. When I arrived, an hour before the doors opened at The Fox Theater in Pomona, the line had already stretched around the building. After one quick glance, one could notice the amount of females in attendance. The crowd makeup was almost 50/50, which is abnormal for a metal show.

These fans were not waiting around all day to see just any ordinary metal band. These fans had paid their $30 to see A Day to Remember, a band known for fusing a unique combination of pop punk and metalcore into a style all their own. On Dec. 21, 2012, the band announced plans to embark on their first headlining United States tour since their last tour, two years before. The tour also included Of Mice & Men and Issues.

A Day to Remember is one of the most popular bands in metal right now and I underestimated that. After an hour waiting in line, the area right in front of the stage had been filled, so my friend and I had to stand back a ways, but we still had good view of the stage.

We got into the venue just before the first band of the night, Issues, started. Issues plays standard, yet catchy, metalcore with a slight RnB influence. This influence is seen in Tyler Carter’s very soothing vocals and the presence of a DJ – not a Macbook DJ, an actual record scratching DJ.

The band opened with the bouncy, “Love Sex Riot,” which got the crowd on their feet from the start. I immediately noticed how energetic the band was. The bassist was head-banging every which way, while the DJ flew around the stage. Issues has only released one EP, Black Diamonds, yet the crowd sang along at every opportunity. The band has very cool transitions from the vocals to the straight metal, where the screaming tones of Michael Bohn come in. The band kept this energy through their final song, “King of Amarillo.” I only wish that both the vocals were a little higher.

Next up was Of Mice & Men, who also are a metalcore band but with more groove elements. This was my second time seeing this band and their stage presence has improved immensely, especially lead singer Austin Carlile’s vocals. The band started with the ever popular, “O.G. Loko,” which sent the crowd into a frenzy. Towards the end of the song, the band had the crowd do a “Wall of Death,” splitting the crowd right down the middle with fans charging in and colliding with each other on cue.

Almost every song they played that night came off their most recent album, “The Flood,” which I am perfectly fine with. The songs ranged from the heavy, “Product of a Murderer,” to the bouncy and groove fueled, “Ohioisofire,” to the singalong anthem, “Let Live.” The band ended with their most popular song, “Second & Sebring,” a song originally about Carlile’s now deceased mother, dedicated to former Suicide Silence lead singer Mitch Lucker. The crowd sang every word of the song and it was incredible to hear this reaction for a band that was not even headlining.

As good as those bands were they paled in comparison to A Day to Remember. As the lights dimmed, the crowd exploded. The band started the set with a newer song, “Violence (Enough Is Enough).” Though the song only came out five months ago, the crowd knew the chorus word for word. This trend continued throughout the night with everyone singing every word of every song.

Lead singer Jeremy McKinnon took a lot of time talking and interacting with fans, rather than rushing through the set. On that note, McKinnon’s voice was perfect throughout night. A Day to Remember surpassed the energy the two previous bands showed and when it came time for the encore, the crowd responded four different chants. It started with the typical “One more song,” then there was a “USA” chant, followed by “We will rock you,” and finally, “ADTR.” The band played four songs for their encore including two acoustic, which was a nice change of pace. They ended the night with two of their biggest hits, “All I Want” and “The Downfall of Us All.”

Overall, it was a fantastic concert and the best I have been to so far in 2013. It is going to be hard for any crowd to match the intensity and passion of A Day to Remember’s show.
Google Glass to revolutionize Porn

By Micah Raimo
Special to the RamPage

Move over Oakley’s Sunglasses, Google’s new voice-activated eyewear may not only revolutionize communication but also put directing porn in the hands of the common man.

Previously, the only access the viewing connoisseur had to the porn industry was behind a black curtain in a video store. Now Google Glass makes the game more accessible for everyone.

People can do more than make a risky personal video; the glasses also allow people to enter the industry as both actors and directors without bulky equipment.

For the aspiring filmmaker, the gadget specs rival most digital video cameras on the market. Its filming resolution is 720p (the low end of the high definition spectrum) while pictures are shot at five megapixels. The fancy eyewear has 16GB of storage along with instant file sharing to Facebook or any other third party website. All of these attributions are perfect for the Amateur Porn circuit.

The Porn Industry can be pretty difficult to manage and the funds to fuel a website could be pretty steep. Most of the costs go to third party crew members. With Google Glass, most of the those jobs are in the hands of the individual.

Most of the time, the team consists of a one man camera crew and a credit-card charging website generally geared to the male populous.

In directing anything, equipment and the crew can make or break production. Cameras can be bulky and cameramen can be imposing while filming the dirty deed. Proximity can be an issue. Since the camera is in the eyewear with silent command options, the third party camera man can disappear out of the moment. The only way to know if one is being filmed is a little red dot above the camera lens.

The range on the camera in the Google Glass is six to eight feet, giving the option to go from first person to a third party director, opening the filming options for the wearer. Once commanded, the director doesn’t need to say action while getting action.

For some, amateur porn can range from a lame webcam strip show to a dimly lit angled view in a hotel. The worst shot videos are the ones with the single spotlight in the dark, viewing only the dirty deed crotch shot. With the wrong equipment, your post will fall flatter than old champagne. The competition can be, well, stiff.

Amateur porn in essence is normal people trying to do what the professionals get paid for. Granted, some are good but those are few and far between.

Amateur porn genre is further subcategorized into Reality and Point of View (or POV) genres. For POV, the camera man watches the lady act as dirty as possible. The lady becomes his half hour party favor. Reality Porn literally is a bunch of guys, a camera and a gimmick. MILFHunter and BangBros are two of the many examples of this Reality gimmick genre. This subcategory tends to last 45 minutes to an hour because most women are subjected to an interview that weasels into intimate questions.

The fancy shades are an instant one purchase porn production: shoot video, pictures and upload movies to a website. Anybody can turn their one-night stand into a success. Purchasing the new $1500 eyewear will make a Porn director in Amateur porn out of any schmo. Keep in mind this is nothing new to the industry. Google Glass will grant easier access to making porn.

are comprised of many different parts, all arranged to blend together. At the same time, the musical themes are very repetitive.

Almost every track, with the exception of one, seems to start with a cascading electronic keyboard riff and a heavy synth pad. Add another layer of keys on top of that, some electric guitar, and Mars’ unmistakable vocals on top. The chorus was full of catchy hooks. Descending right back into their usual keyboard driven sound.

The vintage, psychadelic feel of the album had a catchy vibe, but eventually the tracks all sounded the same. The only track that broke the mold was their seven-minute title track “Bankrupt!” This was the most intricate song on the album, played with multiple time signatures, melodies and instrumental parts.

Phoenix had their style down pat. They did not waver from their distinct formula of composition and arrangement. Each track was cohesive and nothing felt like it didn't belong. The album is a classic case of too much of a good thing.

A band so committed to their style ought to be recognized. Their instrument creativity sprinkled throughout the album made for a few nice surprises. Phoenix fans will be pleased with their commitment to their distinct style, but casual listeners might feel ready to listen to something else. Overall, a mighty fine job done by our French friends, but maybe add a little variety next time. ☭
Golf recovers from a rough start

By Jana Squire
RamPage Reporter

The Victor Valley College golf team took some hard hits this year losing five players including the star player, Bobby Sole.

Bobby Sole broke his collar bone in a snowboarding accident about eight weeks ago. Two other players did not do well in fall semester classes so they were deemed ineligible to play due to grades.

One girl could not play because of out of state tuition expenses and another girl hurt her back swinging her golf club. Although VVC’s golf team lost player’s this year, they still competed in The Conference Finals.

“Out of five teams VVC is placed fourth,” said Gregg Combs, coach for the golf team.

Combs believes next year will be much better for the golf team.

“We are recruiting harder this year trying to get kids to come play for VVC,” said Combs. “I believe we will be competing for first or second place next year.”

The team will have four of the five players’ back and the only player not returning is star player Sole; he graduates this semester.

Sole started playing golf when he was about seven years old and he is disappointed he could not finish out his last year at VVC on the golf team. He put much effort into pre-season practice showing good results just to have it taken away by a broken bone. It’s possible that if not for his broken collar bone he probably would’ve taken first place at the conference finals.

“Don’t go snowboarding during any game season,” Sole said.

Three women and three men play for the golf team. VVC does not have a women’s team so the women must play under men’s game rules

The six players are shooting 100 so the coach must use 105 or 110 as a score. They could’ve been using 80 if not for the loss of players.

“It’s all about the kids, and we have fun,” said coach Combs. “We are representing VCC well, not quality of play but the quality of the kids is good.”

VVC Rams lose again as pitching balks

By Mario Gonzalez

While sitting at the bottom of the Foothill Conference and having only three games left to play, the Victor Valley Rams baseball team headed into a tough three game series against the current Foothill Conference champs, the San Bernardino Valley Wolverines.

On March 23, the Rams lost 10-5 to the visiting Wolverines in what seemed to be an error-filled first couple of innings as they tried to fight their way back throughout the game.

“They’re a good ball club, they have always been a good ball club. They have some arms this year, good defense, good bats and that’s what you need in baseball. If you got that then the result is, you know, a 10-5 win today and conference champions. That is what we are trying to get to,” said head coach Jesus Beltran about their opponents.

Through the first four innings, the Wolverines proved just why they are this year’s Foothill Conference champions. Sophomore infielder Joseph Szczepanski led things off for the Wolverines, doubling to left center field. After a single down right side and a reach on error by VVC, freshman third baseman A.J. David was walked on four, bringing in the first run of the game. On the next at bat, sophomore Brandon Kinser grounded out into a double play, but that would be enough to bring in another run, giving the Wolverines the quick 2-0 lead.

Scoreless in the first, the Rams managed to get their bats swinging in the second inning after the Wolverines brought in three more runs in the top. Leading off, freshman infielder Chris Solis singled to left field. After a fly out and a strike out, freshman catcher Logan Young singled up the middle which advanced Solis over to second base. Freshman infielder Rudy Jimenez hit an RBI single right up the middle, bringing Solis home and advancing Young over to second. A strikeout would then end the inning, SBVC with a commanding 5-1 lead.

The Wolverines put two more runs on the board in the third and fourth innings. The Rams brought two more runs of their own in the bottom of the third, sophomore outfielder Tyler Spotville annihilated the ball towards left center field for an RBI triple bringing home freshman infielder Cesar Valenzuela. Next at bat, Solis hit an RBI single towards right field, bringing the runner home from third. At the end of three innings, the Wolverines still well ahead, 7-3.

Heading into the bottom of the sixth inning, SBVC leading 9-3 after hitting a 2-RBI homerun in the fourth, the Rams looked for a big inning of their own to get back into this game. After two walks and a single up the middle, Sophomore catcher Chad Howard grounded into a fielder’s choice which would be enough to bring one run home and advancing runners over to first and third. One out and two runners on, Valenzuela grounded out to first, advancing Howard over to second and bringing Jimenez in from third base, the score now being 9-5, in favor of the Wolverines.

In the seventh inning the Wolverines would score one last run in the game, clinching the win for SBVC and yet another loss for the Rams this season.

“Pitching was off today; our starting guy was just off and this is probably his first bad outing all year. Offensively, we gave away a couple runs early in the game and then we kind of picked it up towards the end. They had some good arms and their starter (pitching) was pretty decent. It was just an up and down day, today,” said Beltran.
Baseball season ends on foul note

The Victor Valley College Rams baseball team’s season has come to a close. The team ended their season with a 13-5 loss to the San Bernardino Valley College Wolverines on April 26.

It has been a disappointing season for the Rams as they end the 2013 campaign with a record of 4-32, with a conference record of 1-23, placing them at the bottom of the Foothill conference.

“With the guys that we had, the camaraderie we had, the talent we had, the season was just a little disappointing. I thought we would be better off than where we were,” said Coach Beltran.

The Rams finished a three-game series with the Wolverines. The Rams lost both games with a score of 10-5 for the first game and 11-0 for the second.

Sophomore Justin Hotchner pitched two and a third innings and only gave up two hits.

Sophomore Chad Howard had a .253 batting average to end the season as well as have a .356 on base percentage. Coach Beltran called Howard the team MVP for the season.

The Wolverines put the first runs on the board after Kinser singled to start off the inning and after right fielder Brett Torrence was hit by a pitch. Third baseman Josh Alonzo singled up the middle to bring in Kinser and give the Wolverines a one-run lead. Wolverines put another run on the board after shortstop Mike Trevino grounded into a double play, which brought in Torrence.

Wolverine left fielder A.J. David singled up the middle in the top of the third to bring home the Wolverines third run of the game. Two batters later, with David at first and catcher Ryan Miller at second, David attempted to steal second. There was some miscommunication between Rams shortstop Adolfo Espinoza and second baseman Howard. The ball ended up going between both, allowing Miller to score giving the Wolverines a four-run lead. The Wolverines added two more runs in the fourth inning after a Kinser single, which scored two.

The Rams remained hitless until the bottom of the fifth. First baseman Thomas McCarty started the inning off with his first triple of the year. Designated hitter Chris Solis then singled through the left side, scoring McCarty and giving the Rams their first run of the day. The Wolverines answered back with two more runs in the top of the seventh, with the score at 8-1.

The Rams scored three runs between the seventh and eighth inning. Espinoza hit a sacrifice flyball to score Solis in the seventh. McCarty hit a monstrous double to left field to score left fielder Tyler Spotville and third baseman Cesar Valenzuela.

McCarty would then come in to pitch in the top of the ninth. The Wolverines would end up scoring five times in the inning, ending with a final run count of 13. The Rams put up one run on a passed ball in the bottom of the ninth inning. The Rams season ended on a called third strike to Howard.

“For next season, everything needs to be improved. Our pitching did good for the majority of the year then we kind of drifted off on that. Our hitting struggled all year, our defense struggled all year so we’re going to focus a lot on those two aspects of the game for us and come back strong next year,” said Beltran.

Sophomore Chad Howard had a .253 batting average to end the season as well as have a .356 on base percentage. Coach Beltran called Howard the team MVP for the season.
